7. The Dairen Medical College [ ] had an enrollment of slightly more than 2,000 students. All student expenses were paid by the government except food charges, which were about 15 new yuan a month. A student from a poor family who could not afford the food charges might apply to the government for support. All students lived at the college in quarters on the ground floor of the school building. Eight students occupied a room furnished with four bunk beds and a long study table. Classrooms and laboratories were located upstairs. In one laboratory, there were several dozen microscopes. Before entering the laboratory, each student had to put on a mask and white uniform stored by the entrance.
